

The forgotten medal

Joe was going on a school trip to Weston beach. When Joe got there he took his shoes off so that no sand got in them and then played football. The sand felt very cold and rough. Joe could smell fish and chips in the distance and could hear the waves crashing down onto the freezing sand and people chatting. Joe could see the pier and could taste salt from the sea. Soon Joe stopped playing football and started building a sand castle with his friends.

Joe started digging a hole while his friends were building the outline. While Joe was digging a hole, he saw that something was pointing out of the sand. So Joe stopped digging and picked it up, straight away he knew what it was. It was an old army badge from the war. Joe put it on and pretended to be a soldier in front of his friends.

When suddenly, he disappeared and reappeared in a completely different place. Joe felt confused, he was sweating. Joe had appeared on top of a cliff with German soldiers at the bottom and cows chasing him. Joe started running but the cows were too fast. So they started beating him up by standing on him.

Suddenly, Joe gets out his medal. The sun shines on it and shines at the cows' eyes and that made them blind.

One minute Joe was there the next he was gone. Joe quickly disappeared and reappeared at the beach with his friends and went back.
